To Whom It May Concern,

I am writing on behalf of the Association for Behavioral Health and Wellness (ABHW) to provide comments on disclosures with respect to mental health and substance use disorder benefits (mh/sud) and the Mental Health Parity and Addiction Equity Act (MHPAEA).

Background

ABHW is an association of the nation’s leading behavioral health and wellness companies. These companies provide an array of services related to mental health, substance use disorders, employee assistance, disease management, and other health and wellness programs to over 170 million people in both the public and private sectors. ABHW and its member companies use their behavioral health expertise to improve health care outcomes for individuals and families across the health care spectrum.

For the last two decades, ABHW has supported mental health and addiction parity. We were an original member of the Coalition for Fairness in Mental Illness Coverage (Fairness Coalition), a coalition developed to win equitable coverage of mental health treatment. ABHW served as the Chair of the Fairness Coalition in the four years prior to passage of MHPAEA. We were closely involved in the writing of the Senate legislation that became MHPAEA, and actively participated in the negotiations of the final bill that became law.
Since the Interim Final Rule (IFR) was issued, ABHW member companies have worked vigorously to understand and implement MHPAEA. We have had numerous meetings with the regulators to help us better understand the regulatory guidance and to discuss how plans can operationalize the regulations. Our member companies have teams of dozens of people working diligently to implement and provide a mental health and substance use disorder (MH/SUD) parity benefit to their consumers.

Comments on Disclosures

We recognize the importance of transparency and disclosure of information to consumers and are aware that consumer education and understanding was an important principle of the original legislation. However, we are very concerned that recent disclosure requirements (Part 31, FAQ 9) and the Consumer Guide to Disclosure Rights document released by the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), the Department of Labor (DOL), and the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA) do not have the intended effect and fail to recognize existing sources of information to address parity information issues.

A research paper published in Journal of Health Economics found that 86% of participants could not define deductible, copay, coinsurance, and out-of-pocket maximum in a multiple choice questionnaire. Given this, we question the value to consumers in providing documentation of all of the specific underlying processes, strategies, evidentiary standards, and other factors considered by the plan (including factors that were relied upon and were rejected) in determining that the NQTL will apply to this particular MH/SUD benefit. There are better ways to inform consumers about how their plan is implementing parity without overwhelming them with thousands of pages of documentation.

Before any additional guidance documents are issued we encourage you to both consult with the Trump administration and review the language related to disclosures in the 21st Century Cures Act. ABHW supports a transparent process where subject matter experts, including payers, develop general templates (both for participants and for states) that can be released for public comment. We do not believe payers should be mandated to use model forms. We support keeping the disclosure requirements at a level where consumers will understand the information they receive and will not be overwhelmed with a U-Haul truck of complex information.

We do not recommend different types of model forms for different scenarios. This will further complicate the disclosure issue. A general, descriptive model form is desirable so that an individual does not have to spend days reading and interpreting the information disclosed to them. It is important to recognize that not every disclosure inquiry necessitates disclosure of all documents that are available to be disclosed in order to answer the question.

If a model form is developed for states to use in their review of a plan we support the same process as outlined above, a transparent process where subject matter experts, including payers, develop the form and then the public is given the opportunity to comment on the form.
Additional Areas for Consideration

Increase Education to States
We know that federal regulators are working with the states to educate them about the intent of the federal parity law. ABHW recommends increased education about MHPAE to state officials who are enforcing the law and its accompanying regulations. Our member companies are currently faced with each state enforcing the federal law in a different manner. In some cases, states’ interpretations are inconsistent with other states and the express guidance issued by the federal departments. Often times, states are asking parity compliance questions that in reality will not inform the state as to whether or not the plan is properly implementing parity. Managed Behavioral Health Organizations (MBHOs) have also seen a lack of understanding at the state level that has led to attempts to incorrectly enforce the law. For example, at least four states have at various times interpreted the federal regulations (despite the express language of the regulations and clarifying guidance in the form of FAQs) to REQUIRE that a plan use the primary care payment as the only permissible copayment for outpatient behavioral health services. We hope that additional education and training will lead to more consistent enforcement across the states and ensure that all Americans are provided with the parity benefit that Congress and the federal regulators intended for them to have.

Parity Accreditation
ABHW encourages you to consider supporting the creation of a parity accreditation standard that would deem a plan parity compliant. Recognition of such an accreditation by consumers, federal and state governments, employers, and providers would support consistency of interpretation and assessment of parity compliance. If such recognition were to exist, ABHW and its member companies are willing to work with others to help develop this process.

Recognize Appropriate Clinical Differences
The interim final rule (IFR) recognized that there are times when a direct comparison between physical health and MH/SUD does not make clinical sense and is not appropriate for the consumer. We encourage the regulators to recognize that differences do exist between behavioral health and physical health in order to ensure that the best quality, evidence based care is being provided to consumers. Parity is important, but so is quality; and we have to make sure that we are not so rigid with our implementation of parity that we end up compromising on quality care for consumers.

There are times when an NQTL should not be imposed in the same manner it is imposed for physical health care. There are differences between behavioral and physical health and the regulations should allow for some reasonable variation that is consistent with, and accommodates, those differences.

ABHW members are responsible for paying for, and delivering, quality care. Yet this strict NQTL comparison to medical care that is in the regulations ties our hands and results in elimination of terms and conditions being applied to behavioral health that are necessary and appropriate to ensure quality of care.

Recognize that Network Adequacy is not a Parity Issue
There needs to be recognition that the parity law was not intended to address behavioral health network adequacy issues. Behavioral health networks are influenced by a lot of factors that are external to plans, such as: lack of behavioral health providers in certain geographic areas, unwillingness of providers to contract with managed care, and a shortage of behavioral health providers. The network adequacy issue needs to be addressed but parity is not the right vehicle and comparing a physical health network to a behavioral health network is not an apples to apples comparison.

Bring Substance Use Confidentiality Laws into Parity with Physical and Mental Health

The parity laws do not include parity regarding access to and disclosure of substance use disorder records. This puts substance use disorder patients at greater risk and inhibits integrated care for these individuals. The 42 CFR Part 2, or Part 2, regulation authorized by a 40-year-old outdated law, separates a patient’s substance use records from the rest of his or her medical records and treats them differently from records for any other medical or behavioral condition. Currently, only with multiple signed authorizations from the patient, can substance use information be shared with providers and care coordinators. This is not the privacy standard used for any other medical care (including mental health). There is no parity in this area, and as a result, many individuals with a substance use disorder are receiving substandard, uncoordinated care. Part 2 is especially alarming in the current environment where the opioid addiction crisis demands closer coordination between medical providers and substance use treatment. This is fundamentally a parity issue, the Part 2 regulations should revert to the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA) for the purposes of treatment, payment, and health care operations.

Thank you for the opportunity to comment on disclosure and other issues related to parity implementation and enforcement. ABHW’s member companies and I look forward to continuing to work with you.

Sincerely,

Pamela Greenberg, MPP
